How Administrators Can Support the Development and Implementation of High-Quality IEPs

Notes:

Description:

A few months into her new role as principal of Washington County Elementary, Ms. Pederson is beginning to feel the pressure of the many competing demands for her time:

Description:

academic achievement, attendance, student behavior, personnel, parental engagement, community partnerships. There are just so many responsibilities, some of them unexpected.

Notes:

Description:

For example, she recently attended a districtwide administrator's meeting, during which the implications of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in the Endrew F. case were discussed.

Notes:

Description:

Prior to that conversation, Ms.
Pederson had confidence in her ability to oversee the IEP process in her building,

but now she's not so sure.

Notes:

Description:

As she reflects, she recognizes that—like many principals—she has had limited training in effectively supporting students with disabilities...

Description:

More, she realizes that, in her previous position as assistant principal, she simply handled the IEP process as her predecessor had done.

Notes:

Description:

As she leaves the district meeting, Ms. Pederson wonders what she must do to ensure the development and implementation of high-quality IEPs.
